Sheila,
I know I already mentioned this before I left today, but I want to send you this message to document the issue, again.

i tried to humor the move and attempt to work in the new floor. By the end of the day, after being there since before 9 am, i was feeling hoarse and my throat was feeling weird. I could also smell something like volatile chemicals when I arrived in the morning, but it did fade away and I did stay working all day. Now that I have been home for a few hours the problems with the throat and the hoarseness have cleared.

That was the same pattern i had when we had the EPa move and remodel of 1986 or so, during which I did get very ill, together with Bernie and Marcia. I will probably try to minimize the time I work on the floor until whatever is in the air clears out, and may work in the 11th floor temporary space or library.

Feel free to share this with whoever can do something to help ventilate the place, and with (b) (6)(b) (6)(b) (6), and (b) (6), who are already concerned about this issue.
